This update introduced the ability to use the PS Camera to control cameras on your camera and all other DSLRs similar to the DSLR itself (excluding Nikon). This feature is called Smart Preview and it lets you control the camera like it was on the camera itself. E.g. you can change settings, gain focus, switch to manual, and even use the dials on the camera. The biggest improvement in the RAW development section is with the type of camera profiles. In previous versions, you had to create profiles for each vendor, different type of glass, and were limited to the limited selection. Now you can create a profile that supports all lenses with the RAW development section directly on the camera. So, if you create a custom profile for the D800 for JPG development, you can create a profile that will also work for the D800, D800E, and D5. Prior to this version, you had to create separate profiles for each of those cameras. In previous versions, the D800, D800E, and D5 supported the Adobe DNG. But, if you want to produce a much higher-quality JPG, you can also now use the sRGB ColorSpace profile that Adobe supplies with the DNG file. You can also change the color space settings in the developed JPG file in Lightroom. Still, for the moment, Lightroom 5 is stable, and you can't go wrong giving it a try. Just be aware that Lightroom 5 isn't perfect; some of the new features mentioned don't work the way they should, and the image selection tools could use a couple of minor improvements. As for what's a must-have feature, it's to have a free update after six months, since Lightroom doesn't come with the service of re-learning the new features. At the very least, this way users will not have to buy Lightroom 5 to have the new features.

Even if they have come across your site or account, they will be more careful to visit your website that has been macro tagged. Unlike 'regular' tagging (used for watermarking), macro tag watermarking allows you to add custom watermarks on an image with a simple push of a button. The macro watermarking option is powered by a combination of image processing and machine learning. It works on images that consist of an oversized or distorted region, usually with the background content. The watermark can be your logo, company name, website's name or something related to your products or services. But it is a universal tool meant for all types of images and the region can be as large as you want. Photo editing software is not all about transformations and filters. You can either create and end with the picture, or build the composition from freehand, or use the sharpness tool to make your subject look more appealing. The layer comp helps to set the focus and elevate the visual composition by adding different components in the image.

Just like in frames or video art, you can take a perfect outline of the area and arrange the frame with a slight rotation. While your frame is still aligned at a certain point, just keep rotating the frame and you'll actually achieve the graphically impressive result in half the time.
